

Support for families with special needs

Employees with special needs in the family have a unique set of challenges, and the care they need can be complex, overwhelming and costly. UnitedHealthcare helps reduce stress for your employees by providing compassionate support to them and their families at no additional cost.

A single point of contact to help ease stress

Advocate4Me® assigns a highly trained adviser to each family to provide a streamlined experience and personalized, comprehensive support that spans medical, behavioral and pharmacy needs, including:

- Insurance and payment
- Care delivery
- Social support and well-being

This adviser works with clinical staff, providers, social service disability consultants, process experts and others who work to get the family the right support and care.

Advisers who go above and beyond

- Build a relationship with the family—a family's adviser knows their history and unique needs
- Take responsibility for each inquiry and see it through to resolution
- Address the needs of the person, along with the condition or question they're calling about

Helping remove barriers for faster resolutions

Callers are automatically routed to their adviser. This process is designed to help create a streamlined experience to:

- Watch for potential issues and provide alternatives
- Provide planning for the future, from diagnosis through treatment
- Coordinate UnitedHealthcare solutions and external resources
- Help care providers resolve questions and issues

As a result, families may get faster access to support, with a goal to help ease frustration and confusion.
